Review: 'Zulu Rising: The epic story of the battle of Isandlwana' with Ian Knight (Wednesday 25th May)

The origins of the Anglo-Zulu War were rooted in the Napoleonic Wars. Southern Africa was a way point en route from Europe to India and the Far East so when Napoleon took the Netherlands, the British seized Cape Town from the Boers and established the Cape Colony. However, southern Africa was a complex backwater in which the British Government had no inclination of becoming embroiled. The discovery of diamonds at Kimberley was certainly enticing though and Sir Henry Bartle Frere, High Commissioner of Southern Africa, proposed a confederacy with the Boers and Zulus based on the Canadian model. Bartle Frere knew that subjugating the Zulus would cause all other tribes to cede to the British so he provoked them by making an impossible ultimatum to spark war. But Bartle Frere underestimated the Zulus both diplomatically and militarily and so began a six-month war not sanctioned by his political masters, but ultimately committed to so as to bring about a successful conclusion.

Your Committee

The Society is led by an enthusiastic Committee that books speakers, hosts talks, organises events and fulfils administrative requirements. Most of your current Committee has served for almost three years and so we're always keen to invite new postholders to join us in order to encourage fresh ideas. Andy will be stepping down as Secretary once a successor has been appointed, so please do reply to this email or speak to any Committee member at the next meeting if you're interested in this position or any others.

Military History News

The Longest Siege in Military History

When it comes to sieges, we often think of Stalingrad, Leningrad or Malta, but nine sieges in history lasted more than 10 years and the longest – of Cueta on the north African coast – stretched for 33 years. Read more

Sweden: a history of neutrality ends after 200 years

During the Napoleonic Wars, Sweden suffered a devastating defeat at the hands of Russia and so began two centuries of distancing itself from European alliances and conflicts. Now, it's that same foe that has caused a change in that stance as Sweden applies for membership of NATO. Read more

Harp and Crown

To mark the centenary of the disbandment of British Army units that traditionally recruited in southern Ireland, a new special display at the National Army Museum explores the history of Irish regiments and their soldiers. Read more
